Doris: Good morning
Librarian: Morning! Can I help you?
Doris: I'd like to take some books from your library
Librarian: Very well. Have you got a library card?
Doris: No, not yet.
Librarian: Please fill in this form. Have you got a passport?
Doris: No, I haven't. I'm only fifteen.
Librarian: Please write your name, surname, address and the telephone number.
Doris: How long can I keep the books?
Librarian: Two weeks. But if you want some books for a longer period, you can prolong them. If you haven't enough time to come to the library you can do it by telephone.
Doris: Well, I am interested in the history of England. I wonder if you could recommend me anything.
Librarian: Yes, of course. Just a moment. I'll look through the catalogues and find the books you need.
Doris: Thank you very much.

Mr. Jones told Freddy that he wasn't doing well in class and that he probably wouldn't pass.
Freddy replied that he knew that but that he didn't have time to study.
Mr. Jones asked him why he didn't have time and if he couldn't make the time.
Freddy answered that he had to take his mother to the hospital every day and that, in fact, he had taken her there the night before.
Mr. Jones asked him if he was the only one who could do that.
Freddy answered that she didn't have anybody but him because his father had died the year before.
Mr. Jones told Freddy to stop taking the class if he had family problems because the stress would kill him.
Freddy said that he might do that even though his mother wanted him to continue. He added that she had told him to stay in school.
Mr. Jones told Freddy not to kill himself but to take care of his mother until she felt better.
Freddy told Mr. Jones that she wasn't sick and that she felt fine.
Mr. Jones asked him why she had to go to the hospital every day.
Freddy explained that she worked there and that she was a nurse.
